Massachusetts friends the Museum has received two collections of interesting plant sduring the past week. On September 5 the blazing start, orange weed and pimpernel from Nantucket, and little ladies' tresses from Martha's Vineyard. The following were received from Winthrop September 11: Purple thorn apple, southernwood, blue curls, salt marsh fleabane, knapweed, Japanese knotweed, pink persicaria, slender persicaria, and Mexican tea.

Goldenrods and asters predominate among the local plants at this season and many wild fruits make bright spots of color in the woodlands and by the roadsides. The list for the past week is: Panicled blue-stemmed goldenrod, pink thoroughwort, marsh cress, purslane, ternate grape fern, Braun's holly fern, and fruits of American beech, prickly gooseberry and clammy ground cherry September 6; fruit of wild balsam-apple Tradescant's asterand fruit of black chokeberry from Fryeburg, Me., September 7; hairy spurge, peppermint and fireweed or pilewort, and fruits pulpit, three-leaved sanicle, and choke cherry, September 9; white dies' tresses, Setpember 11. The bird population is diminishing with the coming of cool weather but many species are still here and sing occasionally as they feed on the wild fruits or the food furnished by their human friends. During the past week Connecticut warblers were seen twice in a garden searching for insects, juncos, a few bark swailows, king fishers, a blue-headed vireo, a flock of indigo buntings, a magnolia warbler, field sparrows, a chimney Mrs. Freeman's sister, Mrs. W.
